

Sailors' bodies come home

Families notified; cause of explosion still unknown

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The bodies of sailors killed in the gun explosion on the Iowa arrived in the United States on Thursday as the Navy tried to figure out what caused the battle ship's turret to blow up.

One of the guns in the No. 2 turret had been fired before the explosion and the seamen, Navy officials said, discarded a theory that the blast had been sparked by red-hot debris in the gun's breech by earlier firings.

The Navy organized a board of inquiry and placed a moratorium on firing 16-inch guns, found only on the Iowa and its three sister battleships, the New Jersey, the Wisconsin and the Missouri.

The Iowa was headed back to its home port at Norfolk, Va., while the bodies of the dead were flown to the military mortuary at Dover Air Force Base in Delaware and families of the ship's 1,600 crewmen learned where their relatives were among the dead.

At the White House, chief of staff Donald Regan announced President Reagan will attend a memorial service on Friday for the victims in Norfolk.

The blast occurred Wednesday morning northeast of Puerto Rico as the Iowa took part in firing exercises with the ship's former captain both as a part of naval training.

A spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet said the ship's former captain both as a part of naval training.

The explosion in the No. 2 turret had been triggered by red-hot debris from earlier firings in the gun turret.

Cmdr. Mark Baker, chief of the Navy's Pentagon press office, said later that none of the turret's three guns had been fired.

Only four rounds of 22 scheduled to be fired as part of a training exercise had been fired, he said, and all had been from the No. 1 turret, forward of the one that exploded.

No eyewitnesses survived Wednesday's explosion behind one of the 16-inch guns on the Iowa, one of the largest warships ever.

Pentagon officials declined to speculate publicly about the exact cause of the disaster, the worst to strike a Navy ship since 1977, but two officers — Capt. Paul Hanley, a fleet spokesman, and Capt. Larry Seaquist, the ship's former captain — said a possible explanation was that red-hot debris from a previous round ignited new charges.

But Seaquist stressed, "We simply do not know what caused that powder to go."

Baker said no guns in the No. 2 turret had been fired and the order had just been given to the No. 2 turret crew to load and prepare the center gun when the explosion occurred.

"We have no eyewitnesses to what actually transpired," Defense Secretary Dick Cheney told reporters as he headed back to Washington from a NATO meeting in Brussels.

The Iowa sailed to Roosevelt Roads Navy Base in Puerto Rico to unload the bodies, which were then flown to Delaware.

Navy investigators boarded the ship as it left for Norfolk, where it is expected to arrive Sunday or Monday.

Navy Secretary William Ball attended a memorial service at the Delaware base, home of the armed services' largest mortuary. The flag-draped coffins were carried off a plane by Navy honor guards.

Around the United States, Navy officers and chaplains broke the bad news to the dead men's next of kin.

Jury in North's trial starts deliberation

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The jury in Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial was dispatched Thursday to decide the guilt or innocence of the former White House aide with the judge's admonition that no one, including the president, had "the legal authority to order anyone to violate the law."

North has said he had authority from superiors including, he believed, President Reagan, for many of his actions in behalf of the Nicaraguan rebels at a time when official U.S. aid was banned.

Because of the lateness of the hour, jurors were sent to the nearby hotel where they will be sequestered, and ordered to begin deliberations on Friday.

U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell told them "your job is to decide the facts" in the first trial stemming from the mid-1980s affair in which profits from arms sales to Iran were diverted to aid the Nicaraguan rebels.

The judge was specific in his instruction about North's contention that he acted under orders from top White House officials and, he assumed, with Reagan's approval.

"Neither the president nor any of the defendant's superiors had the legal authority to order anyone to violate the law," Gesell said.

"Our country is governed by the rule of law. You have heard testimony indicating that other government officials may in some respects have concealed facts known to them, and some ranking above or below the defendant may have engaged in conduct similar to that charged against the defendant on trial."

But, he said, the conduct of others was no justification for North's conduct and "you are not to judge defendant's guilt or innocence based solely on the actions of others."

The judge's charge was delayed for a half day by a problem involving jurors who may have given misleading answers in pre-trial questioning. When he convened court in the afternoon, Gesell said he had denied a North motion for a mistrial, filed on grounds that "the jury had been infected by publicity about some of its members."

The five alternates were dismissed after Gesell gave the instructions and were driven home individually by U.S. marshals.

Gesell said North's defense that he was authorized to cover up his secret Contra role may be considered, but under closely defined circumstances.

"Authorization requires clear, direct instruction to act at a given time in a given way," he said. "It must be specific, not simply a general admonition or vague expression of preference. It must be sufficiently precise."

The most attentive person in the courtroom as Gesell read his long instructions appeared to be North, whose eyes seldom left the judge. Occasionally, the 47-year-old defendant would make a note on a legal pad.

Six of the charges involve withholding information from Congress when it sought to find out about North's and the National Security Council's role in supplying aid to the Contras at a time when it was forbidden.

Aspen Grove, other entities may lose tax-exempt status

JIM RAYBURN
Universe Staff Writer

Utah County is planning to review parcels of land that are owned by 10 separate entities, one of them BYU, to determine whether to continue treating the properties tax-exempt.

Donald M. Smith, Utah County Assessor, has submitted to the Utah County Commissioners a list of properties that receive tax-exempt status and should be taxed. He said the property owners have been notified of a board of Equalization meeting to be held April 24, when each party will have a chance to plead his case.

At the meeting (the county assessor's office) will have a chance to say why we feel the property should not be granted tax-exempt status, and the land owners will have a chance to say why it should," said Smith.

Smith said in order for property to receive tax-exempt status it must meet certain criteria. The first criteria is that it must be owned by a non-profit organization. Secondly it must be used exclusively for either religious, educational or charitable purposes, he said.

Smith said the county assessor's office sent questionnaires to the tax-exempt property owners in the county to determine exactly what their property was being used for, and as a result he came up with the 42 parcels he feels do not qualify for tax-exempt status.

Smith said the assessor's office is not questioning BYU's non-profit status. However, he said the properties in question are not currently being used for a religious, educational or charitable purpose.

Smith said the properties owned by BYU that are in question include four vacant parcels, one building lot for a future home, property leased for student rental, a parcel used for private purpose located on the main campus, a piece of land that a portion of the Riverside Country Club driving range is built on and the Aspen Grove recreational area up Provo Canyon. William Fillmore, associate general counsel for BYU, said he is reviewing the property in question. "I assume we will contest the county on most of the properties and there is a possibility we will concede on a few of the properties," said Fillmore.

Fillmore said the county granted BYU tax-exempt status on Aspen Grove a year and a half ago after BYU petitioned the county for exemption. He said it is inappropriate for the county to challenge BYU on Aspen Grove's status so soon. "I would think after the county granted us exemption that we could rely on it," said Fillmore. "After all, we're still using it for the same purpose."

Twelve pieces of property, mostly farm land, owned by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are also being challenged.

Other properties on the list include the swimming pool, outdoor theatre and two parking lots at Scera Park in Orem, the union halls of the United Steelworkers of America and the United Brotherhood of Carpenters.

UVCC to leave Provo campus

Plans are being made to consolidate programs to one place

ELENE YOUNG
Universe Staff Writer

Utah Valley Community College is planning to abandon its Provo Campus in an effort to consolidate the college into one campus, said UVCC President Kerry Romesburg.

What we're really doing is consolidating our academic programs onto the Orem campus and this means we must eventually abandon our Provo campus," Romesburg said.

He said he hopes to have a facility on the Orem campus to accommodate the classes that will be moved from the Provo campus within two years. However, Romesburg said the time scheduled will depend on finding a buyer and the terms of the sale of the Provo campus.

He said the proceeds from the sale of the Provo campus will be used to build a new facility in Orem.

Romesburg said one reason for abandoning the Provo campus is economic. "The programs on the Provo campus are not well attended and the services we offer there are a drain on the budget." He said there is a small cafeteria on the Provo campus which "runs in the red" because it does not serve a lot of people. He added that all of the other food services at UVCC are "in the black."

"We try to make sure that the students and faculty on the Provo campus don't feel abandoned but it is a real budgetary drain," Romesburg said.

Another reason for closing the Provo campus, said Romesburg, is that despite efforts to make faculty and students feel like they are a part of college life, they feel isolated. "Faculty and administration in that building feel that is one reason student enrollment is lower there than it would be on the Orem campus."

Derek Hall, assistant director of UVCC public information, said the Provo campus is used mostly for vocational classes.

Although the two scientists did not claim to have achieved fusion, they pointed out that tritium is produced only in the fusion of two deuterium nuclei, reported the Associated Press.

Deuterium is a hydrogen isotope and a component of "heavy water."

With duplication reports being released almost daily, some scientists look to the reports for information but are also raising questions about their usefulness.

"What most people have done is set up simple experiments based on information from the news and have had no results," said Aksel Hallin, assistant professor of physics at Princeton University.

Based on an early paper on the U of U experiment, Hallin and a colleague reproduced the experiment, but detected neither heat nor radiation.

Hallin said the confirmation process would only become interesting when results came from laboratories with the most sensitive apparatus for measuring cosmic rays or radiation.

On March 23, U of U chemist Stanley Pons and his British colleague Martin Fleischmann said they had developed a simple method of producing room-temperature fusion, the combination of two nuclei into one.

The team used a process involving palladium and platinum electrodes immersed in deuterium oxide, or

Cold fusion confirmed again

By GERTRUD STIEFLER

The latest confirmation of the University of Utah cold fusion experiment came Thursday from two researchers at the University of Florida, who said they had produced tritium, a radioactive isotope of hydrogen.

Although the two scientists did not claim to have achieved fusion, they pointed out that tritium is produced only in the fusion of two deuterium nuclei, reported the Associated Press.

Deuterium is a hydrogen isotope and a component of "heavy water."

With duplication reports being released almost daily, some scientists look to the reports for information but are also raising questions about their usefulness.

"What most people have done is set up simple experiments based on information from the news and have had no results," said Aksel Hallin, assistant professor of physics at Princeton University.

Based on an early paper on the U of U experiment, Hallin and a colleague reproduced the experiment, but detected neither heat nor radiation.

Hallin said the confirmation process would only become interesting when results came from laboratories with the most sensitive apparatus for measuring cosmic rays or radiation.

On March 23, U of U chemist Stanley Pons and his British colleague Martin Fleischmann said they had developed a simple method of producing room-temperature fusion, the combination of two nuclei into one.

The team used a process involving palladium and platinum electrodes immersed in deuterium oxide, or heavy water, containing lithium ions. The scientists said they produced energy in the form of heat four times the amount added.

On Monday, two other U of U scientists announced that they had detected Helium-4 when they ran an experiment similar to that of Pons and Fleischmann.

In hot fusion, when two deuterium nuclei fuse they produce Helium-4, which eventually split into either Helium-3 and a neutron or tritium and a proton.

U of U chemistry Professor Cheves Walling, who together with Professor John Simons performed the experiment, suggested that in cold fusion Helium-4 might give off energy in the form of heat.

"One of the confirmations of the excess heat is that you should be making Helium-4," said Walling.

BYU professor of physics, B. Kent Harrison, in a paper issued April 18, offered some comments on the confirmation process of the fusion experiment.

The two main reactions that could explain the U of U experiment in terms of fusion, are either a fusion reaction with two deuterium nuclei producing Helium-3 and neutrons or the fusion of ordinary hydrogen and tritium, the heaviest form of hydrogen, said Harrison.

Both of these reactions would have produced neutron or tritium radiation in doses lethal to the experimenters, according to Harrison.

"The fact that the scientists are still alive can only indicate that neither deuterium-deuteron (the nucleus of a deuterium atom) fusion process is occurring at a level sufficient to produce the heat claimed in the U of U experiment." With regards to Monday's announcement, he said although the Helium-4 result is possible, it is unlikely for the other two results not to have occurred just by means of a palladium metal.

The reaction producing Helium-4 would also have produced gamma rays in lethal doses, Harrison said.

Walling's response to the question of radiation was that it would be present "only if you believe that that's the way the energy is given off; does it give off energy through radiation, neutrons or heat?"

Walling said the appearance of Helium-4 was a sure indication of fusion. "There is no other way you can get it (Helium-4), if you have eliminated all possible sources of contamination," he said.

Yocum wants new district attorney setup

SALT LAKE CITY — Salt Lake County Attorney David Yocum, decrying the conflicts of interests and political partisanship he says infect the state's county prosecutor system, has urged the Judicial Interim Committee to support a non-partisan district attorney setup.

Yocum urged the panel to establish a district attorney system, which he said would address some of the difficulties that have plagued the Salt Lake County attorney's office in recent years.

Yocum argued that the proposed statewide district attorney system would provide experienced prosecutors for all counties in the state. The system would be funded through the state instead of through individual counties.

Many Utah rural areas do not have a full-time prosecutor. Justice suffers when an attorney, barely graduated from law school, works part time as a prosecutor and part time in his own private practice, Yocum said.

Because many rural counties do not have a full-time prosecutor, Yocum receives requests to "rent a prosecutor" to counties to assist with homicide cases.

"I can't send my crack prosecutors to other counties because they are paid by me through Salt Lake County. I can't just donate their time," he said Wednesday.

Under a district attorney system, prosecutors could specialize in areas of law, such as child abuse and homicide.

Fallout compensation bill introduced

WASHINGTON — The Senate version of the Hatch-Owens bill to aid the victims of radiation from both uranium mining and atomic bomb testing three decades ago has been introduced.

Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, launched the bill Wednesday. In addition to Rep. Wayne Owens, D-Utah, the bill has attracted seven co-sponsors since the two lawmakers announced the joint proposal earlier this month.

The bill primarily is designed to provide $50,000 payments to victims of radiogenic cancers contracted as the result of downwind exposure to radioactive fallout from nuclear weapons tests in the Nevada desert between 1951 and 1962.

The bill also is aimed at providing relief for uranium miners who contracted ailments, including cancer, during the same period while working in allegedly poorly ventilated mines in the early 1950s. Their payments would be $100,000.

Owens said through a spokesman that six House members had agreed to co-sponsor the bill, which is to be introduced in the House soon.

Polygamist's prison terms lengthened

SALT LAKE CITY — A federal judge Thursday added token increases to the prison terms of polygamist clan ringleaders, saying that Congress should reconsider mandatory sentencing guidelines that hamstring judges.

U.S. District Judge Bruce Jenkins added 10 months to the 15-year term of clan leader Addam Swapp and one month to the five-year sentence of his mother-in-law, Vickie Singer.

Jenkins added one month to the 10-year sentence of Jonathan Swapp and reduced Swapp's probation from five years to three years.

Last September, Jenkins originally sentenced the four for the Jan. 16, 1988, bombing of a Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints chapel in Marion and a subsequent standoff with federal agents that ended in a shootout that killed state Corrections Lt. Fred House.

Prosecutors were seeking seven more years for Swapp and Mrs. Singer under a resentencing ordered by the 10th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in the wake of a U.S. Supreme Court ruling in January upholding mandatory federal sentencing guidelines for a broad spectrum of violent crimes.

IRS handling returns ahead of schedule

OGDEN — The Ogden Internal Revenue Service Center received 812,000 federal income tax returns on Wednesday, two days after the deadline for putting the forms in the mail.

IRS spokesman Doug Green said the center has received 3.3 million returns since April 10, bringing the total to 10.1 million. The facility expects to handle 12.3 million by the end of the fiscal year in October, he said.

"It's a zoo out here," said Green.

So far the center has received requests from a total of 114,000 people for filing extensions. That number is expected to double, the spokesman said.

The center by Monday had shipped 6.3 million returns to the national computer center in West Virginia. It is 16 percent ahead of the anticipated schedule for processing returns, Green said.

The center's work force is at an all-time high of more than 6,000 employees, but that level will begin to drop in about two weeks, according to Green.

Air Force doctor to travel with Quayle

HILL AIR FORCE — Dr. Michael Nash, a major and internist at northern Utah's Hill Air Force Base, has accepted a two-year appointment as one of two doctors on call to travel with Vice President Dan Quayle.

Nash said he is pleased with the opportunity to watch over the health of the man who is a heartbeat away from the nation's highest office, but he downplayed the achievement of getting the job.

"It's more or less just a routine Air Force assignment," he said. "It's not like I was hand-picked by Vice President Quayle."

Indeed, Nash, out of the University of Minnesota's medical school eight years, has yet to meet Quayle.

"I'm going into it cold, basically," he said Wednesday.

Nash said he was asked in January if he was interested in being nominated to the post of physician to the vice president. "Why they called me, I'm not sure," he said. After an interview with White House staff physicians in March, Nash was given the job. He is to be in Washington by mid-June.

Hitler's birth marked by arrest of 8 people

Associated Press

BRAUNAU, Austria — Riot troops ringed the house where Adolf Hitler was born and police said they arrested eight people Thursday for marking the 100th anniversary of the dictator's birth with Nazi slogans and stiff-armed salutes.

Hundreds of police swarmed this city of 17,000 people to prevent a repeat of the 1979 clashes between neo-Nazis and leftists that marked Hitler's 90th birthday.

No serious incidents were reported.

Across the border in West Germany, foreigners closed their stores and kept children out of schools because of fears of neo-Nazi violence. Several members of anti-Nazi vigilante groups were arrested for carrying weapons.

Security was heaviest here, at the two-story yellow house where Hitler was born on April 20, 1889.

The house, a former inn now used as a day-care center for handicapped children, was sealed off with metal barriers manned by dozens of police and special riot squads with dogs.

About 50 to 100 onlookers stood nearby. Nearly all shops along the street were closed, some barricaded with wooden boards.

Police said unspecified numbers of people were being turned back at the border by West German or Austrian border police.

A police spokesman said two Austrians, three Italians, two West Germans and an American were arrested and face fines of up to $2,300 for their public behavior.

The Italians, one Austrian and the American gave the Nazi salute, said a police official who did not give his name.

One West German was arrested after he shouted Nazi slogans and spat at reporters. Police said he was carrying a large knife.

Another West German also shouted anti-Semitic slogans, including "Jew, go and rot!" and "This will be a national holiday in 100 years' time!"

Officials did not identify those arrested. They were charged with misdemeanors.

On Wednesday, four Americans, an Irishman and a West German were ordered by police to change their black boots and brown shirts, garb reminiscent of Nazi uniforms, police said.

"Judging by what could have happened today, I am happy with the security measures taken," Braunau Mayor Gerhard Skiba said.

Skiba defended an anti-fascist memorial he ordered put up in front of the "Hitler House" two weeks ago.

"I did not ask the city council, because I knew that the (right-wing) Freedom party and part of the (conservative) Austrian People's party were against it," he said.

'My conscience is clear,' Bush tells reporters

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Thursday "my conscience is clear" about the Iran-Contra affair and Congress should deal with Ronald Reagan's lawyers — not him — about sensitive White House documents that lawmakers say were obtained with the president's promise of cooperation.

Talking with a small group of reporters, Bush expressed confidence that Reagan administration attorneys had been cooperative in supplying Congress with the information it wanted.

Members of the congressional committees which investigated the Iran-Contra episode have complained they did not see politically sensitive documents that have turned up during the trial of fired White House aide Oliver North.

The material has raised new questions about Bush's involvement, while vice president, in the Reagan administration's secret campaign to help the Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

Bush noted he has reached an agreement with Congress on a blueprint for the budget, has drafted plans on Third World debt and the savings and loan industry and has conducted a round of Middle East diplomacy. "So I think that we're moving reasonably well," Bush said.

On other matters, Bush:

—Said he was very pleased at the reaction of the stock market to his budget deal with Congress, saying the recent rise on Wall Street has been "very heartening." However, he said, "I'm not heartened by the interest rates."

—Declared that selective drug testing for federal employees "is very important, and nobody will change my mind on that one."

—Said he wished there was "some dramatic plan" that could win an agreement to stop the violence in Lebanon. Bush added, "We don't have great influence in Lebanon with the factions that are fighting."

—Said he has not made any decision on new restrictions against semi-automatic weapons. Likewise, he said he has not made a decision about how to modernize the strategic nuclear arsenal or funding levels for the Star Wars missile defense program.

Summer Fun '89

Seasonal food for health and taste

by A. CORY MALOY
News Editor

Food. Without it a successful summer would not be possible. Barbeques, junk food, ice cream, soft drinks, restaurants, etc., all become part of the annual ritual associated with summer activities. The problem is that during the time most people want to look and feel their very best they eat the foods that are full of unneeded or unwanted calories and are the most lacking in food value.

Dean Hall, administration assistant for Rhinehart Oil (parent company of Hart's convenience stores) said their Hart's store in Provo probably has the busiest self-serve soda fountain in Utah. He would not say how much they sold in a day, but it was "considerably high."

One food that is often overlooked during the summer is fish. Yet fish is one of the most versatile nutritious foods available, and there are a number of simple ways to prepare fish to tasty perfection.

One of the most popular ways to eat during the summer months is food cooked on the barbecue grill. Fish lends itself well to being cooked in the outdoors, and there is a surprisingly large number of barbecue recipes for fish from the Utah streams to the monsters of the ocean.

Oily fish are the best for barbecuing, but most fish can be adapted for the charcoal. Chef Dirk Zephir of Docks restaurant in New York City said olive and corn oils are the best to use when grilling fish because they are low in monounsaturated fat and are high in flavor. One of the most popular fish in Utah is the trout. To barbecue trout simply grill the fish on a well-oiled grid or in a well-oiled wire grill basket, on a covered grill, over medium-hot charcoal briquets for three to five minutes or until fish flakes easily when tested with a fork; turn only once.

To make a simple tarragon cream sauce to highlight the barbecued flavor of the fish, mix in a bowl:
1/4 cup olive or vegetable oil
1/4 cup whipping cream
1 tablespoon red wine vinegar
1 tablespoon finely chopped parsley
1 garlic clove, minced
1/2 teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed
1/4 teaspoon pepper

In addition to being tasty and healthy, fish appears to have a second health benefit. Large doses of fish oil can relieve mild high blood pressure and may work as well as some commonly used prescription drugs.

A study conducted on 32 men provides some of the strongest evidence yet to support at least one of fish oil's reputed merits.

Fish oil seemed to work about as well as two mainstays of blood pressure therapy — diuretics and the beta-blocker drug propranolol. However, the amounts taken were much higher than the doses usually suggested by manufacturers of widely advertised brands of fish oil capsules. In fact, when taken at the recommended doses, the oil did not change the subjects' blood pressure.

Other studies have suggested that fish oil can prevent heart disease by repairing damaged arteries, lowering dangerously high cholesterol levels and slowing the blood's tendency to clot. Drs. Howard R. Knapp and Garrett A. Fitzgerald conducted the study at Vanderbilt University.

So, for your next summer outing remember the fish for a tasty meal, and for good health. And while barbecuing in the great outdoors you can

Weight loss: Mind over matter

by DAWN LARSEN
Universe Staff Writer

In every weight loss article I have read, the experts say the key to successful weight loss is to permanently change your eating habits. For years I thought I knew better, and tried every other quick and easy approach to lose weight.

Four years later, and still 40 pounds overweight, I decided to try it their way. During the past year I have lost more than 30 pounds, and the amazing thing is that it isn't been that tough. My secret to success? I simply changed my eating habits and my attitude about food.

I have always loved food. Food was always there to comfort me when I was feeling lonely and depressed. Nothing made me happier than sitting down with a half gallon of ice cream in front of the television. I acquired my love of food as I was growing up. My mother is a gourmet cook and unfortunately I developed a taste for rich, fattening foods. Since I was athletic during junior high and high school, I was able to keep my weight somewhat under control.

But that all changed when I went away to BYU. My first year at college was miserable. I hated being in Provo and I ate to make myself feel better. By the time I went home for Christmas vacation I had gained 30 pounds. For the next three years I tried desperately to lose weight. My usual diet was pretty unhealthy. I wouldn't eat until 4 or 5 p.m., then to reward myself for being so "good" I would consume an immense amount of food in the evening. Needless to say, that weight loss plan didn't work too well.

I also tried almost every diet on the market. Usually these diets left me feeling deprived and hungry and I gained back all the weight I lost. One particular diet I went on was so strict, that after being on it for six weeks without cheating, I lost control and fell into a bingeing and purging cycle that lasted several months. I finally forced myself to stop throwing up the food I ate, and I quickly gained back the 18 pounds I had lost.

Another time I tried to lose weight I practically starved myself. I knew from my previous experience that I didn't deprive myself of the food I loved, so I decided the only food I would allow myself to eat would be candy or ice cream. I figured I would rather spend the calories on something I really liked rather than carrots and celery. As I lost weight, I ate less. I felt this incredible rush of power every time I turned down food — even if it was healthy food. I finally got to a point where I was eating a candy bar, or having a bowl of ice cream every three days. I wasn't eating enough to keep my body going, and finally it gave out. The day I passed out I realized that starving myself was going to make me physically and mentally ill. So, I went back to my old eating habits and gained back all the weight I had lost.

I suppose the reason I was unsuccessful at losing weight was because my eating habits were so poor and I simply had the wrong attitude about food. I used to feel like I was punishing myself by depriving myself of junk food. The ironic thing is that I started to lose weight when I focused on eating healthier rather than dieting to lose weight. About a year ago I became concerned about my health. I had always been very fortunate to have excellent health, but I knew with the garbage I was putting into my body it wouldn't last long.

So I decided to make some permanent changes in my eating habits. The first thing I did was read up on nutrition. I read an article I could find that would teach me what kinds of nutrients I needed for a healthy body. One of the biggest changes I made was that I reversed my daily eating habits. Instead of starving myself all day then consuming all of the calories at night, I started eating breakfast, then eating less as the day progressed.

Another thing I did was become very conscious of what foods I ate, mentally calculating how many calories I had eaten, how much fat I had consumed and what nutrients I was lacking that day.

I never stuck to a programmed diet. In fact I didn't feel like I was on a diet at all. I basically ate what I wanted too, but I modified a few of my eating habits. I eliminated butter and cheese from my diet, I substituted frozen yogurt for ice cream and I tried to stay away from fried foods. I also started lifting weights and running several miles every day.

I still have not reached my goal, but I know I will. As trite as it sounds, the only way to successfully lose weight and to keep it off is to change your eating and exercise habits.

BYU may share in funding

Energy council gets $5 million

By TODD JAMES WILLARDSON
Universe Staff Writer

Gov. Norm Bangert has appointed a Fusion/Energy Advisory Council to oversee and regulate the University of Utah's use of the state Legislature's $5 million appropriation for furthering cold fusion research.

The nine-member panel will "set a criteria for determining a confirmation of the (U of U's) experiment, then monitor control of their accomplishments, and receive and evaluate proposals submitted by the university for research funding," said Chairman of Bonneville Pacific Corp. and Fusion/Energy Advisory Council Chairman Ray Hixson.

The use of the funding will be to move from pure basic research to technological research and then to study possible applications the technology would bring, said Hixson.

"We can't wait until we know it works to provide the money," said Hixson. "We don't understand everything about it, but we need to explore because it may take 20-30 years of evolving, changing and improving before we are able to really capitalize on the technology. However, no money will be appropriated for commercial research until a confirmation is received," said Hixson.

A breakthrough in science technology is usually confirmed through publication of the results after the results have passed peer review, said BYU Public Communications Director Paul Richards.

Richards said BYU physics professor Stephen Jones has followed scientific etiquette and not publicized any specific findings until after publication.

Nature Magazine's north American physics editor David Lindley said Jones' article will be published in the April 27 issue, and many revisions were required by a panel of "referees" who reviewed the article.

Nature referees sought changes in the paper submitted by the University of Utah, but because Pons/Fleischmann did not provide revisions, the U will not have its paper published by Nature in its current form, Lindley said.

Hixson said the Legislature has provided the funds for "the advancement of fusion/energy technology, and that means the money could be used in energy research, whether or not the science is fusion."

The use of the $5 million has not exclusively been given to the University of Utah.

"The money was officially allocated for the U of U because it is a state school, but there is a provision for any other schools within the state to participate, and we want to see that a part of it goes to BYU," said Hixson.

BYU would receive money from the appropriation only by acting as a "subcontractor" that would be hired out by the University of Utah for specific information and assistance for the fusion/energy program.

Utah State University College of Science Dean Karen Morse considers fusion research performed at USU to be "productive competition."

Morse said she assured the board that USU members can "work independently and objectively" on the council.

The council consists of Hixson, Morse, USU physics professor Wilford Hansen, U of U engineering board chairman Clair Coleman, Cedar City CPA Joe Gubler, Hercules Inc. ex-vice president Ernest Mettenent, Research Industries president Gary Crocker, Salt Lake lawyer Mitchell Melich and Bangert's science advisor Randy Moon.

"We want the technology to stay in the state of Utah, and we will use the funding wherever in the state we can to assure that the technology stays within state. That's the key," said Hixson.

Pons considering deal pursuing fusion study

SALT LAKE CITY — University of Utah chemist B. Stanley Pons is reviewing potential contracts with the Los Alamos National Laboratory to pursue cold nuclear fusion research, school officials say.

U of U Vice President for Research James Brophy said such an agreement would allow some of the school's fusion-related experiments to be conducted at the New Mexico lab, recognized as the home of the atomic bomb.

The deal also would call for some of Los Alamos' research to be done on the Salt Lake City U of U campus.

Negotiations on the agreement came following Pons' visit to Los Alamos on Tuesday.

On March 23, Pons and a British colleague, Martin Fleischmann, announced they had sustained nuclear fusion in a beaker of electrically charged heavy water. Further, the two said the experiment, conducted at room temperature, had produced more than four times the energy used to create the reaction.

Skeptics, mainly physicists who have chased nuclear fusion for decades, maintain that the experiment was actually an unknown chemical reaction rather than fusion.

However, scientists throughout the world say they have duplicated the fusion experiment with similar results.

Absolute proof of fusion remains elusive, however.

Meantime, researchers at Texas A&M denied published reports that their confirmation of the Utah project was probably an error.

Texas A&M announced last week that it had successfully replicated the most controversial part of the Utah experiment, an electrochemical reaction that produced far more energy than required to make the reaction work.

The Texas A&M confirmation was believed to be the first in the United States.

Texas A&M chemistry professor Charles Martin on Thursday reaffirmed his school's duplication of the table-top experiment.

Martin said a second experiment continues to produce stable amounts of excess energy, although at a somewhat lower level.

He and his colleagues are carrying on additional experiments to try to explain the difference.

Texas A&M is waiting to confirm its results before announcing them formally, he said.

Although Georgia Tech retracted its confirmation, the University of Washington and Stanford University also continue to stand behind their announced confirmations. Confirmations have also been announced by scientists in Hungary, Italy, Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union.

Pons has said up to 60 other laboratories have successfully duplicated the experiment but are keeping mum to protect possible patent rights.

The issue of confirmation is paramount to members of the newly formed state Fusion-Energy Advisory Council, which will not release $5 million in state funding to the U of U project until members are sure of Pons' claims.

The council has requested an April 28 meeting with U of U President Chase Peterson, and possibly Pons, to discuss the confirmation process.

Council members will also be haggling over the issue of whether any of the $5 million can be allocated to other Utah institutions doing fusion research.

BYU researcher Steven Jones has been doing cold nuclear fusion research since 1986. And Utah State University scientists announced Wednesday they also have joined in fusion research.

FUSION

So far laboratories in their confirmation reports have demonstrated only very low levels of neutron or tritium production or none at all. "Thus it is clear that the fusion origin of the energy production has not been confirmed," said Harrison.

"Low-level production of neutrons, on the other hand, with little associated energy, has been demonstrated in several locations, including BYU," said Harrison.

BYU physicist Steve Jones announced a few days after Pons and Fleischmann that he had created a similar process but without the high amounts of energy output.

While Jones has measured substantial amounts of neutrons, subatomic particles which are almost always produced in a fusion reaction, by means of a sophisticated neutron-counting device, the U experiment has been criticized for the absence of neutrons.

Even the neutrons detected in BYU's experiment might not be evidence of fusion because the radiation may be due to cosmic rays, said Hallin, who criticized both the U of U and BYU experiments for lack of information on the cosmic rays and the natural radiation.

Free child abuse conference to be held Saturday at BYU

By LEEANN LAMBERT
Universe Staff Writer

The Utah County Child Abuse Council (UCCAC) and the Timpanogos Mental Health Education and Consultation Department are sponsoring a free child abuse conference, Saturday at BYU's Conference Center, said a member of the UCCAC.

"Basically we (the UCCAC) function as a coordinating counsel between different agencies that work with children and with families. Our council has members from all the different agencies. We try to keep the different organizations coordinated and see that they don't overlap," said Margy Ullman, a member of UCCAC.

The Utah State Division of Family services awarded the UCCAC with a grant to provide professional training on how to handle child abuse situations, and part of the grant money is going toward the conference this weekend, said Ullman.

"Breaking the child abuse and substance abuse cycle is the purpose of the conference. The two are closely related," said Paul Dymock, a prevention specialist at the Timpanogos center.

One of the speakers at the conference, Anne Horton, teaches social work at BYU. Horton's most recent book is "Abuse and Religion: When Praying Isn't Enough."

"I have recently conducted a national study on religious needs of victims and their families," said Horton. "The child abuse conference on Saturday, is designed for religious leaders and those who work with religious populations which would include most of the people in this area," she said.

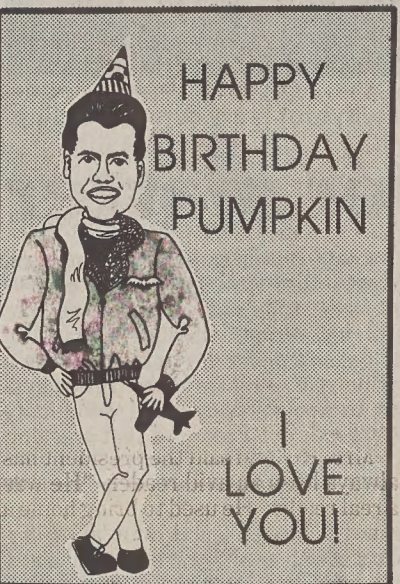

The biggest problem with child abuse in Utah County is that people deny there is a problem and that it needs treatment, said Horton. "Religious families need alternatives to help them explore solutions to this problem," she said.

"There are four major objectives for the conference," Dymock said. The first objective of the conference is to help educate professionals and the community about the problems of child abuse and substance abuse. The second and third objectives of the conference are to provide an opportunity for people to understand how child abuse and substance abuse are related, and to provide information about prevention and intervention.

The last objective for the child abuse conference is to distribute an updated directory of local resources for families, Dymock said. The directory is free to anyone who attends the conference, said Ullman.

A man for all seasons

Jeffrey R. Holland: more than a president

By SHANNON STOWELL
Universe Staff Writer

Not everyone thinks of President Jeffrey R. Holland as "president." His mother, for example, remembers him as an avid reader, with his favorite children's books being "A Penny, Weeny Town" and "The Mighty Hunter."

His barber sees him as a fun, positive and personable client. His uncle thinks of him as a busy student and an excellent teacher, while Executive Vice President John Stohlton thinks of him, among other things, as a competitive sportsman.

And his older brother Dennis describes him as being "quite a character."

Dennis Holland said, "I picture him as a young kid wearing an oversized cowboy hat and carrying a basketball bat's about as big as he is."

Holland has always been a perfectionist and a man of principle, Dennis said. "For example, when he was out 16, we were on a hunting trip with my father. We were in a jeep, pulling a trailer, and driving down a dirt road. Jeff was driving, and he drove right off the road into the sagebrush."

Dennis said his father asked him what he was doing, and told him to get back on the road.

"Jeff told him there was a rut in the road, and that driving over it would have tipped the jeep and the trailer," he said. "My father bet him a strawberry milkshake that it wouldn't have tipped, and so (Jeff) turned around, drove back over the rut, and tipped the jeep and the trailer over."

Dennis said, "I was sitting in the back, and both of them were sitting there laughing. I told them to get out and turn the jeep over so I could get my head."

Holland's barber, Gary Dayton, said he has been cutting the president's hair ever since Holland joined the BYU faculty.

He said Holland's special hair-cutting request is "make my cheeks look like they're not so fat. Get it off the sides, but keep it long enough for Sister Holland."

Dayton, who works for the barber shop in the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center, said, "President Holland is a fun, very positive, very personable person. When he comes in, he kind of entertains all of us. ... He never comes in our shop here without greeting each one of the barbers individually. He always asks something personal."

Dayton said, "He loves to talk sports. I really think he likes to come in and get relief from his pressures at the office. ... He is able to walk out of the office with the burdens of the world on his shoulders, but he comes over here and can laugh and make all of us happy," he said.

"You always feel better after being in his presence," Dayton said.

Marion Bentley, a BYU professor of theater and film, is Holland's uncle. He said, "The thing which is most characteristic of him is his uncanny ability to meet people and to remember everything about them. ... People get him and feel he is their special friend."

(Holland) is always in the thick of anything that's going on. When he is in school, he was involved in every aspect of student life," Bentley said.

He remembers Holland as class president, best supporting actor in a production of The Matchmaker, captain of the basketball team and a very good student. "He was one of four to graduate with high honors at Dixie," he said.

Friends and family of President Holland remember him as a scholar, leader and competitor, as well as a teacher and personal friend.

Bentley said he also remembers Holland as an outstanding teacher.

"He taught Institute at Yale when he was a student there. He really was and is a remarkable teacher — one of the most excellent I have known," he said.

"One of the things I admire most about him, despite his great abilities as a speaker and his spiritual depth, is that he does not take himself seriously," Stohlton said. "He sees himself as a kid from St. George who used to play in the streets."

Stohlton said Holland is "a terrible loser. He's even as bad as I am." He said, "It's not that he's a bad loser, he's just a very, very competitive person."

If you play racquetball or tennis with him, you'll know what I mean. He likes to play, and does so with great skill, but he also likes to win," he said.

Bentley said the Hollands had an "idyllic romance. They seemed just right for each other from the very beginning," he said.

He remembers Sister Holland as a dancer, a singer and a piano player. "She is very musical in every way," he said.

Alice Holland, the president's mother, also spoke of her son as a winner. "You must realize all this is coming from a mother, and so it might be a tad bit biased," she said.

Information may be harder to come by after this semester

By BECKY HALES
Universe Staff Writer

After 10 years of giving students a break by helping them find their way around the BYU campus and directing their questions to people who can help them, the ASB "Information Lady" plans to take a break for herself.

Cleo Marshall is the person with the warm smile and friendly face who seems to have all of the answers at the ASB Information desk in the afternoons. At the end of the week she will be retiring to enable her to spend more time traveling with her husband.

Ron Clark, director of Hosting Services, said Marshall has been an asset to both the students and the university. "Cleo is a walking encyclopedia of university knowledge."

Marshall said her job at the information desk is to try to eliminate the runaround. She said this often requires sorting through the student's questions to ensure they get what they are really looking for.

Through serving the students, Marshall said she has developed a great love for them. "I've always enjoyed the young students and would do anything to help them — they're what keep me young," she said. "I'm really going to miss them."

Steroid use questioned

Gamecocks investigated

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — South Carolina athletic director King Dixon says an internal investigation by the school into alleged steroid use by some players and coaches will examine "the entire situation" regarding the allegations.

But Dixon said he did not know how long the investigation would take. The internal probe started last year after the allegations first surfaced, but it was halted when a grand jury began looking into the charges in January.

"We've already mapped out our plan of attack, and we've executed it," Dixon said. "The president said 'immediately.' In Marine Corps talk, that means right now."

"We're looking at the entire situation," said Dixon, a former Marine.

The situation escalated Wednesday when a grand jury indicted four former assistant coaches — Jim Washburn, Tom Gadd, Keith Kephart and Tom Kurucz — and a Maryland man — John Landon Carter — as a result of the steroid probe.

Gadd is now an assistant coach at the University of Utah.

The indictments allege that Washburn, Gadd and Kurucz encouraged the use of steroids by some players and also monitored the "special training programs of athletes to enhance the results of ... the steroids."

About two hours after the indictments were announced, Dixon read a short statement outside of his office and declined to answer questions. Dixon was also careful what he said during an interview Thursday.

"This is a real touchy situation," he said. "It really is. There's no winners here. The winner is the fact the investigation has taken place, the findings have come out and we'll take it from there."

Textbook thefts increase at semester's end

By SCOTT H. WAITE
Universe Staff Writer

Finals are quickly approaching and it is that time of the semester when textbooks seem to disappear at an increasing rate, according to University Police.

Paul Bringhurst, crime prevention specialist with University Police, said that in general, the end of each semester shows an increase in reported book theft.

"Students may let their guard down because they think that no one would want to steal textbooks," said Bringhurst. "The fact of the matter is, some students see textbooks as an easy way to make money at the end of the semester because of the BYU textbook buyback in the bookstore."

"Textbook theft is just like any other theft; it is a theft of opportunity," he said.

Acting Sgt. Steve Baker, University Police, said, "We have had as many as 23 cases of reported book theft at the end of a semester. But book theft has started to decline over the past few semesters."

Bringhurst said the BYU Bookstore has good safety measures to help stop book theft, but students need to do their part also.

"If students notify the police immediately of books that are stolen, chances are good that they will be able to recover the books from the book buyback and police will probably be able to trace the books to the thief," said Bringhurst.

He said students are given a pass to go to the bookstore and look through the books that have been returned. When the students find their books, the name and social security number of the person who returned the book have been written in the front of the book.

Bringhurst said University Police have been "very successful" at catching individuals who steal books and then sell them back to the bookstore due to "the immediate cooperation of the victim and the bookstore employees."

BYU student chosen as PR district director

By MARGARET MCKIE
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU student was chosen at a national assembly of the Public Relations Student Society of America to be the Rocky Mountain District director of PRSSA.

David Christensen, a junior from Tooele majoring in public relations, attended the assembly March 17-19 in Atlanta as the representative from the BYU chapter of PRSSA and BYU candidate for Rocky Mountain District director. In Atlanta he was elected by the other members of the district.

Christensen said that starting in June, he will be the director of the seven PRSSA chapters at schools in Utah, Colorado and Arizona. He will visit each chapter, publish a bi-monthly newsletter, oversee the annual district conference and direct public relations education.

Christensen said he is excited about the job. "I think there are some things that can be done in bridging the gap between public relations education and the public relations profession."

As district director, Christensen will also be a member of the National PRSSA Committee, a 20-member governing body of the organization. He said the function of the committee is "making sure the entire thing runs smoothly as a national entity."

Jim Stoeltzing, vice-president of the BYU chapter of PRSSA, said Christensen is qualified for the job of director. "Dave is one of the highest qualified people in the program," he said. He said Christensen's extracurricular activities in public relations, such as working on a campaign for NutraSweet, have helped prepare him for the job.

Rare computing artifacts part of BYU

Unique collection in the United States

By KATHY HARPER
Universe Staff Writer

A history of early computing devices is being compiled by BYU computer science professor Norman Wright.

The Repository of Historical Counting Instruments will soon become a permanent part of the University's expanding museum system, he said.

"No collection of this type is known to exist anywhere in the United States," Wright said.

He sent out almost 1,000 surveys to museums all over the country and found "these instruments to be rare artifacts."

Wright said he has worked closely with curators at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D.C. Since they can't do everything, they show great interest in people who study a very narrow subject, he said. They have given a lot of research support, he said.

"The history of computational devices can provide the student with insight, understanding and appreciation that can be obtained in no other way," said Wright.

He thought it was interesting, he said, that the students of today don't know anything about slide rules or the gear machines that he grew up on.

In 1950, he purchased a hand held calculator run by gears for about $450, he said. The cylinder shaped Swiss calculator, that can fit in the palm of a hand, is operated by turning a crank on the top. It looks nothing like the calculators used by students today.

Accelerated programs offered in languages

DORIS HERNANDEZ
Universe Staff Writer

Accelerated Language programs in Spanish, French and German will be offered during Spring and Summer terms for BYU and high school students.

The French and German programs will be offered from June 26 to August 1. The Spanish Department will offer an institute from May 3 to June 24. This language learning experience gives the student to live in a language house, speak only the foreign language and take a full course load of language classes, said Hans-Wilhelm Kelling, a BYU German professor.

"The idea is to eat, sleep and drink in the language for eight weeks and thus accelerate the learning process," he said.

Kelling said that in this program students are required to sign a pledge to use only the foreign language that they signed up for. This will allow the students to increase their conversational skills and develop language proficiency, said Kelling.

Both men and women will have the opportunity to prepare and eat their evening meals together. This will give the students an opportunity to further their language skills, said Kelling.

Following the conclusion of the course, students in the Spanish program will have the opportunity to take a ten-day trip to Mexico, where the students will stay with Mexican families and will go on field trips to points of interest. The cost of the trip will be an additional $150.

The summer language institute is also open to those individuals who have completed two years of high school language, or the equivalent of foreign residency.

The program will occupy several foreign language houses on BYU campus. Each house will have a head resident responsible for making sure the foreign language is spoken and that disciplinary rules are followed, said Kelling.

Academic peer program available for summer months

SUSAN M. NEIS
Universe Staff Writer

Students looking for help improving their grades during the Spring and Summer terms will still be able to receive help from the Academic Peer Assistance program.

Don Carr, director of the program, said they would be sending out cards to students who have been put on academic probation or warning. These cards will give students the chance to sign up for help from the academic assistants.

Carr said the academic peers are students who are trained to teach study skills, time management and to use the resources on campus. He stressed that the assistants are not trained to handle personal problems.

"We are not personal counselors. As soon as something personal comes up, we refer students to the counselors in the Kimball Tower," Carr said.

Carr said students who are not on probation or warning but feel they could use some additional help can also receive help from the program. "They need to come to the BYUSA offices on the fourth floor of the Wilkinson Center to sign up."

The peer assistance program currently has enough assistants for the Spring and Summer terms. Carr said they probably will hold the next training session when students return for Fall Semester, and will be needing more assistants then.

The rapid advance of computer technology has overshadowed the achievements of the past, Wright said.

It is important that these instruments be preserved before information about them diminishes or fades away, he said.

"Life must be lived forwards, but can only be understood backwards," explains the importance of the repository, and is Wright's favorite quote from the BYU History Department, he said.

"A walk through the archives of the past will introduce the student to men and women with brilliant and creative minds who met the needs and challenges of their own time," said Wright.

"Studying their successful and sometimes unsuccessful efforts will show that many ingenious and effective methods for processing data existed long before the advent of the electronic computer," he said.

So far the repository has acquired odometers, measuring wheels, counting reels and calculating machines.

When the addition to the Talmage building is complete, he said, we hope to get a room to show the exhibit.

Friberg painting displayed at Springville Museum of Art

"The Prayer in the Grove," by renowned LDS painter Arnold Friberg, is on display at the Springville Museum of Art through May 14.

The Springville Museum of Art is presenting a special showing of a work of religious art by Arnold Friberg titled, "The Prayer in the Grove." The painting will remain on display until May 14.

The painting depicts Joseph Smith, prophet of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as he kneels at the base of a great beech tree in the sacred grove. "It shows the young Joseph Smith in the remote sanctuary of silence and solitude where he had gone to pray after reading and pondering the biblical scripture found in the book of James," said Lila D. Larsen, the assistant director of the Springville Museum of Art.

To prepare for the painting, Friberg spent time in late April at the grove where Joseph Smith uttered his prayer. "He spent considerable time there roaming, studying, sketching and photographing trees, plants, leaves and above all, absorbing the tranquil spirit of the place," said Larsen.

"After his travel and other research, Friberg spent months completing the work, which depicts what took place in the sacred grove," she said.

Friberg is widely famed and respected for his historical, scriptural and Western paintings. "Friberg has completed many paintings depicting events from the Bible and Book of Mormon," said Larsen.

The late Cecil B. DeMille once said of Friberg, "Among the living artists who have dedicated themselves almost exclusively to religious art, one stands out for his virility and warmth, dramatic understanding and truth. That man is Arnold Friberg."

In 1952, Friberg received a commission for 12 illustrations of Book of Mormon pictures for "The children's Friend" magazine. "These pictures, which became LDS church masterpieces of these subjects, lead directly to Friberg's work with Cecil B. DeMille where he was chief artist and designer for four years," said Larsen.

Friberg conceived pictorially the scenes, characters and costumes for the epic motion picture "The Ten Commandments." "His series of 15 monumental paintings for this motion picture toured every continent and in 1986 were displayed in a prestigious DeMille exhibit, which attracted over a million viewers," said Larsen.

"Arnold Friberg has heroically captured the most momentous event in history of the Mormon Church. The oil's powerful design and awe-inspiring light touches every ear," said Vern Swanson, Director of the Springville Museum of Art.

"The Prayer in the Grove" is being shown on the museum's second floor in the central gallery with a suggested donation of $1 for adults and $.50 for children.

VH-1 cable finally finds itself

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — VH-1, once a poorly defined cable network that believed what people over 30 wanted was Julio Iglesias music videos, has finally found itself, as members of its baby boom audience might say.

VH-1's parent MTV Networks, which also has the big-time MTV and Nickelodeon cable channels, has in recent months boosted VH-1's staff and budget and given VH-1 chief Jeff Rowe his own pipeline to network president and chief executive officer Tom Freston.

The developments at VH-1 are what network television has most to fear about cable: an entire broadcast agenda microprogrammed to one very lucrative audience.

While the networks take snatches of the age 25 to 49 audience with shows like "thirtysomething," "China Beach," "The Wonder Years," and "L.A. Law," they also have to reach viewers who were unconscious from 1960 to 1980. Just watch "Nightingales."

VH-1, its parent MTVN hopes, is for everyone who stayed awake during those years. "We feel this is a great chance to target the audience that grew up on television and contemporary music," Rowe said in a recent interview.

The new VH-1 programming includes interview segments, clips of classic and contemporary rock and peace marchers, sociologists who became investment bankers and business majors who operate halfway houses.

"A network that is targeted to fit this generation has to know how it lives," he said. "We want to create an environment that keeps people up on contemporary music, but also reflects their past; has comedy about current events, but also is nostalgic."

Student is honored at jazz festival, BYU's Synthesis takes close second

DARIN RICHINS
Universe Staff Writer

Although BYU's Synthesis was edged out of first place by two points at the Berkeley jazz festival, the group wasn't as painful as it could've been. Jeff Campbell, the bass player of the band, was recognized twice for musical achievements.

Campbell, a senior from Bountiful, majoring in music education, was recognized as the outstanding bassist and as the outstanding composer/arranger at the conclusion of the festival.

He said he was flattered with the awards and also surprised because there were a lot of outstanding musicians there. Campbell was aware before leaving for the festival that these awards were available, but he didn't want to think about them.

He didn't want my focus to be on the awards, but it's hard not to think about them," he said.

Cornell storms Chimborazo

Associated Press

Try this for your next college outing. The summit of Chimborazo in the Andean Andes, at 20,703 feet the highest peak in South America.

Cornell University group made a successful ascent of Chimborazo in November as part of the school's outdoor education program.

led by Dan Tillemans, director of Cornell's outdoor education program, the group's four rope teams climbed the summit in nine hours, starting from a base camp at 15,000 feet.

Adjusting to thinning oxygen at 18,000 feet was the most difficult part, the climbers say.

Some people took one step for every three breaths because there's so little oxygen up there," said Tillemans. "When we got there some peo-

Campbell's jazz chart "The Masquerade is Over" was the selection that got him the recognition after Synthesis performed it during the competition. He wrote the chart in 1986 and it is only one of seven he has written. However, he said this is the first time one of his charts has won any awards at a festival.

All of Campbell's songs have been performed on one of the Synthesis albums and he has even sold one of them to Dominic Spera, a well-known jazz artist who performs all over the country.

Campbell said he enjoyed the festival because it is one of the major events in the West and it was a good opportunity to hear other people play the music he enjoys.

Campbell said that his interest in jazz came at a young age. "My parents always listened to jazz when I was little ... it's always been around our house." He said this was evident when he went to elementary school one day and for show-and-tell he took some Woody Herman records to play for his class.

Campbell comes from a musical family, which includes three drummers, two trumpeters, one pianist and one bass player. His father currently teaches music at South Davis Jr. High School in Bountiful, but he used to teach at BYU and was instrumental in the start-up of Synthesis with Newell Dayley several years ago. Campbell has played with his brother Greg in Synthesis for four years, as well as all through high school. The bass and drum team continues to play professionally together. Some of Campbell's recent performances have been for Rich Little, Doc Severinsen and the Barnum and Bailey Circus. He plans to continue playing with Synthesis until he graduates in April 1990 and will tour with the group to Russia that summer. After that, Campbell said he would like to go to a bigger city and attend graduate school and "play clubs and other gigs on the side."

ANCHORS FOR THE SOUL;
Dennis L. Largey $9.95

Emphasizing the need to endure faithfully to the end, this book points out anchors that give stability in both calm and troubled times. Follow the anchor of enlightenment, the power of testimony, and receive spiritual awareness through the sustaining vision of eternal life. This eternal vision expands further as we anchor our souls in obedience to the commandments and covenants, particularly prayer, scripture study, the sacrament, and eternal marriage. Anchors for the Soul a highly readable book and a chart of the course to eternal life.

KEYS TO SUCCESSFUL SCRIPTURE STUDY;
George A. Horton $13.95

Come unto Christ, the scriptures implore, learn of him and keep his commandments. This spiritual journey begins with careful, diligent scripture study. Keys to Successful Scripture Study is a comprehensive guide that clarifies difficult words, phrases, and concepts; explores areas often overlooked or misunderstood; and teaches a variety of study skills that make the scriptures more meaningful. A great guide for the scholar and novice alike.

Students start own game store

By DARIN RICHINS
Universe Staff Writer

Another group of BYU entrepreneurs have begun the sometimes long trek to making a successful business. The idea this time is role-playing games and comic books; the store is called Game World.

David Starling, a senior from Portland, Ore., majoring in economics, is the owner of the new game store in Orem but said the idea was the brainchild of about five people.

Starling said they opened their store to "fill a void" for people who want to take advantage of the products they offer.

Game World specializes in role-playing games, limited board games, comic books and the store also hosts a small video arcade. According to Starling, one of the unique features is a game room where, at no cost, people can come into the store and play or learn about games offered there.

Starling said the store's acceptance has been good because "most game players and comic book readers seek out these types of stores." He said he is expanding into family games and is currently negotiating for Nintendo equipment as well.

Starling was originally approached for investment in the store and he liked the idea, so he invested enough to become the owner.

He said he has always been interested "in owning an entertainment business." Ryan Willmore, a senior from Provo majoring in business, met Starling through the entrepreneur club on BYU's campus. He said he has always been into role-playing games and science fiction books and he too felt the need for a really good game store in the area.

Willmore said the store has been open about three weeks and, although they are interested in getting BYU students aware of their business, their advertising so far has been directed at the high school students in Orem.

Willmore said he was also an investor in the store and his duties have included working with some of the distributors, helping with ideas and gathering information so the store will operate as effectively as possible.

Vince Arebalo said he has been "a gamer for many years." Arebalo, a senior from Las Vegas, Nev., majoring in sociology, said he is considered an employee/advisor in the business. He said that for a long time he has been interested in "running a store where I could play my games."

Arebalo said a good example of a role-playing game is Dungeons & Dragons. However, he said many people have a misconception of this type of game and that, like anything else, it depends on how people use them. He said they can be very positive, entertaining and exciting if people play them correctly. Willmore said he hopes the store does very well eventually and that he would "like to see another store open up in the Salt Lake area."

Actor offers hearty advice

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Five weeks after open heart surgery, actor Carroll O'Connor publicly thanked fans and friends for their encouragement and he offered some advice.

O'Connor's full-page message Wednesday in the Hollywood Reporter and Daily Variety entertainment industry newspapers coincidentally appeared hours after comedian Lucille Ball underwent emergency heart surgery.

Jim Mahoney, a publicist for O'Connor, said the actor called Miss Ball Wednesday to see how she was doing. O'Connor, currently starring in TV's "In the Heat of the Night," is recuperating in Atlanta.

In the newspaper ad, O'Connor, 64, said: "When your good doctor tells you to take the latest kind of cardiograph, and the latest is miraculous in what it can reveal about your heart, don't postpone, don't evade, don't content yourself with the fact that you're feeling swell."

Taiwanese singers come to BYU

The Taiwan Folk Singers Tour is coming to BYU April 29. Seven individual singers and a group of four singers will present a free concert at 7 p.m. in 29 KMB.

The group has toured the United States three times, but is coming to BYU for the first time.

The tour is a service for the Chinese students studying in the United States.

Universities involved with the tour pay for the plane tickets.

Chun Yeung In will be a featured soloist.

He won a Grammy award in Taiwan in 1988. The master of ceremonies for the concert will be Shao Ching Tau, a popular broadcaster in Taiwan.

A dance will follow the 2-hour concert. Students from the University of Utah and Utah State are also invited to attend the dance. Admission is $2.

The group has already toured nine other universities, including Harvard and MIT. They will tour three more schools after BYU, including USC.

The event is sponsored by BYUSA and the Federation of Chinese Student Association in the U.S.A.

paper for everything. Of course every coach and player feels their sport and team is the priority and most newsworthy.

In deciding what does and what doesn't run on the sports page is determined by several factors.

I first look at the team and see if it is BYU sponsored and NCAA sanctioned. By the way, look for men's volleyball to be NCAA sanctioned by the fall season.

I'll also look at the number of fans a sport carries among other considerations. Reporters are assigned to cover a specific sports beat and sometimes, unfortunately for the sport and its players, they simply don't do it adequately.

As for national sports, it would be impossible, because of the lack of space, to run everything going on in the pros but we try to cover prominent events. The Utah Jazz is run on the page, again, when there is space. That will change now that the playoffs are soon upon us. How 'bout them Jazz?!

But writing up the sports article isn't always fun and games. Reporters, including myself, are sometimes up until 1 a.m. finishing articles, headlines, photo cutlines, etc. However, it is rewarding to see a finished ished product the next morning.

I can't believe they pay me to do this.

Among some of my most memorable sports events that stand out in my mind are BYU's No. 2 basketball ranking in February of 1988. The '88 WAC tournament was disappointing as well as the loss to UAB in that same season. And who could forget Jeff Chatman's behind the back, powerful slam dunks?

This season, beating Wichita State in a thrilling national broadcast game was great.

The current BYU men's baseball team is among the highlights of this past semester. Their 14-game winning streak has a strong chance of being extended even further, as well as obtaining a top-10 ranking.

I think newly hired Randy Reid will be an excellent coach in the future of BYU basketball. He is the kind of aggressive, get-after-it coach that wins games. He reminds me of my high school football coach.

I talked with Reid the other day and he said he is more concerned about recruiting these days than finding assistant coaches.

I think Jeff Chatman would be a solid choice for a position as an assistant. Jeff said he would take the job in minute.

Look for highly touted 7-foot, 4-inch Shawn Bradley to sign with BYU within the year because of Reid. I talked with Shawn and I think deep down he wants to stay close to home. He always dreamed of playing for BYU as a kid.

With Bradley, Reid's son and the Durrant kid, another top-10 ranking is not far off for BYU basketball.

I will miss covering BYU sports because of the fact that I'm graduating next week, but I will always keep up with the Cougars. Be assured of continuing good coverage because of some sharp sports-minded editors coming up in the ranks, including my brother Scott.

My goal was to keep the timeliness of BYU sports in the sports page, as well as the quality quotes that make a good story great.

For that purpose alone, I created Sugar Ray Robinson eulogized as 'art form'; 2,300 mourners show up for services

LOS ANGELES — Sugar Ray Robinson was eulogized Wednesday by the Rev. Jesse Jackson as an "art form" whose presence inside the ring had a way of making the world stand still.

Among the 2,300 mourners were longtime family friend Elizabeth Taylor and heavyweight champion Mike Tyson, who had to choke back tears as he spoke.

"Some of us, we worry about where we're going when we die. I'm sure heaven is asking him to come in with open hands," Tyson said, his voice cracking.

The 67-year-old Robinson died of heart disease April 12 at Brotman Medical Center in nearby Culver City. He is survived by his wife, Millie, two sons, a stepson, a stepdaughter and a sister.

Jackson's 45-minute eulogy at the West Angeles Church of God in Christ focused on Robinson's style and class. He called Robinson a hero who "rose from disgrace to amazing grace" and "went from the guttermost to the uppermost," referring to his climb from poverty in Detroit.

Cougar baseball boasts all WAC pitcher; no-hitter highlights DeSilva's BYU career

By SHAWN OLSEN
Universe Sports Writer

With a no-hitter to his credit this year and a 9-2 record that leads the BYU baseball pitching staff, John DeSilva shows why he is all-star material and a serious choice in this year's Major League Baseball draft.

John DeSilva, a junior from Fort Bragg, Calif., and a starting pitcher for the BYU varsity baseball team, is an athlete to be reckoned with.

During his senior year at Fort Bragg High School, DeSilva won the league MVP awards for baseball, football, track and wrestling along with being an honors graduate. After accumulating these honors he played baseball and football for the University of California at Berkeley.

Most college athletes work hard and long to be good at the sport they play, but it takes an extraordinary individual who can play more than one sport on a college all-star level.

He played at UCB his freshman year of college before he decided to come to BYU and concentrate on baseball.

"I had to choose one or the other, and baseball looked like the best career for me," DeSilva said.

DeSilva appears to have made the right decision. Displaying a 90 mile per hour fastball and a "wicked slider," he was taken by the Chicago White Sox during the 1988 Major League Baseball draft. Since he was only a sophomore, DeSilva decided to play at least one more season at the college level and gain more experience.

Last season DeSilva had a 6-1 record for the Cougars with a 3.5 ERA and a total of 71 strikeouts in 78 and 2/3 innings pitched.

For his performance DeSilva was named to the WAC all-conference first team last year. The number one college baseball newspaper in the country, "Collegiate Baseball," said that DeSilva was one of the top players to watch in division one this year.

This year DeSilva has pitched in 62 1/3 innings and has faced 229 batters while striking out 72 of them. His earned run average now stands at 3.8.

"DeSilva has a great arm and so much natural ability," BYU Head Coach Gary Pullins said. Pullins has a lot of faith in DeSilva and the team as a whole. Last summer DeSilva played in the National Baseball Conference, an NCAA sanctioned league. He pitched for the Clarinda, Iowa A's, going 9-2, and helped guide the team to the NBC World Series.

In the first game of the World Series, DeSilva came one batter away in the sixth inning from pitching a perfect game. He finally won the game 8-0.

DeSilva finished second in strikeouts, in the league, for the summer. He averaged 15.3 strikeouts per game and was one of only four pitchers named to the all-tournament team out of 33 teams.

DeSilva said summer baseball helped him grow and get a taste of what the minor leagues must be like.

Last season's highlight, for DeSilva, was a seven inning, two hit shutout against the University of Utah when he sat down 11 batters by strikeouts. Now he has topped himself with a no-hitter that he threw against Colorado State University.

He really enjoys playing at BYU and DeSilva says he is very happy about choosing baseball as the sport for him.

DeSilva says he loves pitching for the Cougars and he has a lot of confidence in the team defense when he is on the mound.

"Our team is strong and we are going to make a run for it this year in the WAC and in the World Series," DeSilva said.

DeSilva pitches today against the University of Wyoming in the first game of a doubleheader in Laramie, Wyo., to help stretch the Cougar lead in the WAC.

"I will just go out on the mound and relax," DeSilva said. "I don't try to do too much on my own, but I like to take charge of the game."

Steve Carlton retires after comeback fails

Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — Steve Carlton gave up a three-year struggle to remain in the game he loved, telling the baseball world Wednesday he is through pitching after repeated comeback attempts.

Even this spring, Carlton — coming off September surgery to remove eight chips from his pitching shoulder — still was trying to show major league teams that he had the same fire that earned him four Cy Young awards.

"My arm hasn't rehabilitated the way I had hoped," Carlton said in a brief statement issued by the Philadelphia Phillies, for whom he recorded 241 of his 329 career wins.

The Phillies said they would retire his uniform number, 32, in a July 29 ceremony.

Recruiting is not easy for Cougar coaches

By BRENT BROWN
Special to the Universe

Athletic recruiters here at BYU say attracting quality athletes is easy in some ways because of the kind of school BYU is. They also say recruiting is a nightmare in other ways because BYU is the kind of school it is.

Interviews with recruiters and some athletes indicate that because BYU is a church sponsored school, many unique advantages and disadvantages arise in recruiting. When the athlete being recruited is a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the coaches interviewed said they felt they had an advantage in recruiting him, but when the athlete is not a member of the Church, the coaches said they felt they were at a disadvantage.

Roger Reid, the recruiting coordinator for the basketball program, said that he thinks BYU has the toughest recruiting job in America. He said, "I could have gone to UCLA and been known as the greatest recruiter of all times. There were kids sitting on their bench during our game with them on Saturday that would not even let a BYU coach into their house."

Reid points to the Church standards and the fact that there are only so many people in the world who are 6-8 and taller as reasons for BYU having a hard time recruiting a lot of top basketball talent. Reid said, "I definitely think that the church standards hurt us in recruiting non-members. Basketball is also being dominated by black athletes and we have a hard time recruiting them because BYU has such a small black population."

Reid said the only advantages in recruiting at BYU are when a LDS player is being recruited.

He said, "When I go to a LDS player's home I can promise him that BYU will be the best place he could go."

Marty Haws, a member of the Church and the starting point guard for BYU the past two years, agrees that there are many advantages to attending BYU. He said that his decision came down to BYU or Utah. "I chose BYU for two reasons. First, I wanted to be in the atmosphere that BYU offers. Secondly, I was really impressed with the basketball facilities, particularly the Marriott Center."

Other recruiters at BYU don't have quite the time of recruiting that Reid does. BYU head baseball coach, Gary Pullins, said that recruiting athletes to come to school here is a pleasure.

Pullins said one advantage BYU has is its reputation as a Christian school. Pullins pointed out Stan Younger, one of the first blue-chip athletes to come to BYU. Assistant football coach Dick Felt said Younger was one of the easiest signings ever. LaVell Edwards called Younger the best athlete to ever come to BYU up to that time.

Younger, a black athlete, could have gone to many top schools, but came to BYU because his mother wanted him at a Christian school.

Although BYU does not always get the top talent because of its standards, all the recruiters interviewed said that the standards were a benefit in the long run. Chris Pella, the recruiting coordinator for the football team, said if a player does not want to attend BYU because of the standards, the football program really doesn't want him anyway.

Pella said that recruiting for the football team is made a little easier because of the reputation that the team has. He said that because BYU is a known football school it opens a lot of doors for recruiting. He said, "We get to talk to a lot of kids, but in reality, a great running back is going to attend USC or Nebraska. Now if the player is a receiver or quarterback we have a good chance of getting him."

Agreeing with Reid, Pella said that the football team also has a hard time recruiting non-LDS players. He said that many of the non-LDS players have a lot of falacies about BYU. He said, "I've dealt with recruits who thought they had to wear ties and coats to class and that they could not date Mormon girls."

One of the unique advantages BYU enjoys in recruiting, according to the coaches interviewed, is the nation wide recruiting program that Church members offer BYU coaches. Reid said he receives hundreds of referrals on players from bishops every year.

He said, "I see the tips we get as a plus for our program, but there are also a lot of people who consider themselves authorities on basketball who aren't. I can't do much with a 5-8 player."

Pullins also gets referrals on players from all over the country. He said that many times the referral is just that the player is a good student and person. Then Pullins can call a scout in the area to find out what kind of ability the athlete has, and decide whether to recruit him.

All the recruiters interviewed said they felt the walk-ons BYU attracts was another advantage of recruiting at BYU. Pella said that the football team gets about 40 walk-ons and some of them end up earning scholarships.

Pullins himself was a walk-on baseball player for Coach Glen Tuckett. "I wanted to play at BYU, but they never even looked at me," said Pullins.

Reid sees walk-ons as good public relations for BYU. According to Reid, the basketball coaches look at over 100 walk-ons every fall.

ing a successful student athlete's dedication and proper time management, said Ryan Rhees, a member of the BYU golf team. Rhees, 21, a freshman from Orem, is in business, realizes first the challenges a student-athlete has to face.

"I've learned a lot the first year of college," said Rhees. "It is not easy balancing school and practice. I have to manage my time wisely and set goals."

Rhees began playing golf at the age of 10. According to his father, Dr. John Rhees, a professor of zoology at BYU, "We bought Ryan his first golf club the summer before his seventh grade year. I would take him to the golf course in the morning and he would play five or six rounds of golf before calling us to come and pick him up."

the time Rhees turned 16, the work had paid off. That summer he enrolled in the Utah Junior Golf Tournament and began to establish himself as one of the top young players in the state. By the end of the summer, Rhees had won several golf tournaments and was voted Jr. golfer of the year.

the wheels are in motion for the men and women's gymnastics programs to step into the national ranks, a few years to be competing on the same level as UCLA for the men and the University of Utah for the women.

the reason I am predicting this is because I believe that the two teams have the necessary parts of my success formula: coaching, facilities and athletes, to become national contenders.

first part of my success formula is perhaps the most essential, coaching. Both the men's and the men's teams have this position well defined. The women's first year coach, Makoto Sakamoto, brings to BYU a long tradition of success and championships to the team.

Sakamoto's list of accomplishments includes coaching Peter Vidmar to his second medal in the 1984 Olympics. According to Vidmar, Sakamoto has a tremendous desire to win and be successful.

"He has the ability to make the dull seem exciting and he really motivates the gymnasts to do their best," said Vidmar.

On the women's side, first year coach Brad Cattermole brings to the team years of active coaching on the national level. He has coached many national gymnasts to the top of the national team's specific events.

Shuman standout Korie Jackman and all-arounder Marianne Jones are just a few examples of successful athletes they have coached over the years.

Cattermole, along with his wife, is currently a qualified gymnast (age), began and currently operating the largest gymnastic club in the

All-American Gymnastic Club in Orem, since it opened 13 years ago, has won many of their young gymnasts

Rhees attended Orem High School and began to make an impression on his golf program. While in high school, Rhees teamed with his long-time friend Phil Tucker, son of Karl Tucker, BYU's golf coach.

Rhees and Tucker spent the next three years in head-to-head competition for the number one spot on the team. According to Mick Peterson, coach of the Orem High Golf Team, "Rhees and Tucker were always pushing each other, never competing against the other, but helping one another to be better."

In 1985, Rhees' senior year, the Orem High Golf team entered the state tournament ranked second behind Timpview High. In the state title match, Rhees fired an even par 70 to take home medalist honors. Tucker finished right behind him with a 71 and Orem High School took home its first State Golf Championship.

"That was one of the most exciting experiences of my life," said Rhees. "I'll never forget the feeling."

Before reporting to BYU in the fall of 1986, Rhees was chosen to represent Utah on the American Cup Golf Team. During the World Champion Tournament, Rhees advanced to the final 16 before being eliminated in match play. "That experience helped me a great deal," said Rhees. "After nasts excel in the national competitions. Currently the club has over 500 young girls participating in gymnastics. This well of young talent provides an excellent pool from which the coaches can recruit gymnastic talent for future BYU teams.

Another part of my success formula is that the two teams need to have to be competitive and to be successful is the need to have the proper facilities in which to practice.

BYU has just such a facility. In fact, according to Sakamoto, the BYU men's coach, the facilities here at BYU are the best in the world, including many of the eastern block countries.

In addition, both coaches feel that they have a tremendous amount of support from the trainers and the administration to push their programs forward.

The final part of the formula is to have the proper type of athletes; the athletes who work hard and have a good team attitude; athletes who are willing to sacrifice for the benefit of the whole team.

BYU has these type of athletes on their teams. This was demonstrated when both teams had to overcome adversity, injury and youth this last season to accomplish their goals with tremendous team spirit and progress.

The atmosphere that the school offers to a possible recruit, and the attitude that the coaches have toward gymnastics, assure that these type of athletes are the ones that are going to come and wear blue to compete on the men's and women's gymnastics teams.

I believe that the ground work is established for the BYU gymnastics program to enter the 1990's prepared to step into the top rankings in the country.

After watching the competitors all year and talking to the coaches, I have seen a tremendous desire to work hard and succeed in what they are doing.

I predict that both the men and the women gymnastics teams could be shooting for a national championship in three or more years (maybe less).

For you students who will still be here and are reading this article, when the gymnastics teams are ranked in the top-5 in the country, remember that the year 1989 you were told it was going to happen.

attending Jr. World, I knew I could compete against the best in North America."

When Rhees arrived at BYU, he found the competition for a starting role very stiff. After speaking with Coach Tucker, they determined to have him redshirt his freshman year. The following year, Rhees opted to serve a mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Milan, Italy. "The decision to go on a mission wasn't easy, but it was something I had always wanted to do."

Following a successful mission, Rhees returned home during the summer of 1988 and immediately began to prepare for the 1988-89 golf season. "We have a young team," said Rhees. "Not one person on this year's team was here when I left in 1986."

According to Coach Tucker, "Rhees has worked hard since returning to our program. He has made golf his top priority and takes the time necessary to be the player we know he can be. The mental toughness, required in golf, will return after being tested in competition."

To qualify for the traveling squad, each team member plays eight rounds of golf over a two week period. After 144 holes of golf, the top five or six players will make the trip.

With all the time spent in the classroom and on the golf course, Rhees has come to understand the importance of using time wisely. "I have to schedule my time carefully and use small breaks to study. For me the keys to success are dedication, good experiences at the right time and a lot of confidence."

If Rhees' past is any indication of things to come, his future holds great promise, not only for himself, but the BYU golf team.

Teacher certification still in early stages

By KENNETH S. ROGERSON
Senior Reporter

The idea of a unified system to determine excellence among school teachers in the United States is still in its embryonic stage, according to the executive director of the Utah Education Association.

There is still a lot of educating to be done in all states, said Lowell Baum. "If you were to interview several teachers about the proposed certification process, you would get a mixed-bag of responses."

Right now, certification first takes place when a teacher graduates and begins teaching. A teacher may return to school at his own discretion but, if he continues teaching, he need not re-certify. "If you are continually employed in the education profession in Utah, that automatically re-validates your teaching certificate," said Lorraine Hansen, a representative of the Certification Section of the Utah State Office of Education.

If a teacher quits teaching for a while, he must re-certify before being employed again.

But certification of continued excellence, according to the January edition of NEA (National Education Association) Today, is controlled by the profession and is a voluntary process.

The article, by Gary Sykes from the Department of Education at Michigan State University, said "certification typically aims at advanced or specialized competence in a field and confers benefits rather than restricts practice."

Physicians, for example, through extra training and experience can become board-certified and receive hospital privileges, access to positions, special insurance rates and other benefits, said Sykes.

In 1987, the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards was created and it began developing assessment procedures to certify teachers who would choose whether to participate in the process.

"Teacher leaders hailed the move," said Sykes. "For the first time in history, the profession itself would develop standards of excellence in teaching."

Baum said he thinks teachers would be more than willing to participate in something that would give them more recognition and pay.

Sykes said there are some problems. It could emphasize one "best" way of teaching when there are many good ways to teach, the requirements would have to be so different for each teaching level that the workload would be enormous, and it would divide teachers into two separate groups — good and bad, i.e. certified and non-certified — when there are many types in between.

But, he also presented the NEA's point of view which has looked into all of these areas and has found or is in the process of finding solutions to these problems, including recognition of a teacher's worth and the challenges of teaching.

According to Baum the NEA is trying to mold its programs to fit what teachers across the United States want. Most NEA members now support a certification of excellence with some modifications as the future may dictate.

"Part of what they are trying to accomplish is a very high standard," said Baum. "This will show that a teacher has gone beyond what was expected."

"The National Board for Professional Teaching Standards envisions assessments that give candidates for certification the opportunity to justify their actions in response to teaching situations and to have their judgments reviewed by peers," said Sykes in his article. "If the teaching profession doesn't take control of its own standards, we'll go on having grossly inadequate standards imposed on us," he said. "The time has come for the profession to stand up and be counted."

New vocabulary book uses pictures to teach

By LEEANN LAMBERT
Universe Staff Writer

A BYU graduate and a BYU student have collaborated on a new book designed to increase students' vocabularies through the use of "mnemonics," a method of learning where pictures are used to teach concepts, said a BYU professor.

"Drawings help students to learn concepts. This book does the same thing because the drawings teach the definitions of words, and definitions are concepts," said Kenneth Higbee of BYU's Psychology Department.

The book, created by BYU graduate Mark McGregor, is called "Mnewords" (pronounced new words).

"One of the theories of learning is assimilation and accommodations," said McGregor. This theory of learning ties the knowledge a person already has with the new concepts being taught. "It's the tying together of the known with the unknown. The picture, the meaning of which is already known, is the catalyst Over time, as the word and its meaning are recalled, visualized and used, the picture becomes less of an influence in remembering," he said.

Jeff Lee, a junior from Placentia, Calif., majoring in advertising, illustrated the new vocabulary building book for McGregor.

"I read an ad placed by Mark in the Daily Universe last spring for an illustrator for the book. I've done things like that before. I had done three other children's books. I answered the ad and a week later I got the job," said Lee.

"Mnewords" has 100 cartoon drawings designed to make learning new words fun and easy, said McGregor.

An Orem High School teacher, Cheryl Lewis, used the book in her

Hansen said she didn't know whether a new organization was totally necessary.

"An organization that takes care of its own problems will take the burden off the public."

The self-governing organizations and committees of the UEA and the Utah Professional Practices Advisory Committee could easily take the place of a new organization, she said.

classes this year and said the book's humor helped to increase her students' abilities to learn and to retain new vocabulary words.

"The book was written in a humorous way capturing the emotions. Whenever emotions are used to teach something, it will increase retention levels," said Lewis. "I think it can make a significant difference."

Additionally, the new book has been used this semester in a BYU freshman English class to increase students' vocabularies, said Susan Ream of the English Department. "I found his drawings very effective," she said.

One of Ream's favorite drawings in the book, teaches the word "analogic" by showing a girl named Anna taking care of a sick letter "G" that is lying in a bed, said Ream.

"I think the book would be a very effective means to learning new words for all ages," said Higbee.

"The book's effectiveness for college students would depend on the vocabulary used in the book, and I think there were words in the book college students would not know," he said.

The book is currently in the BYU Bookstore and will also be in Walden Books and B. Dalton Bookseller's, said McGregor. McGregor is working on three future editions of the book to be published this fall, he said.

Taiwan company picks Utah as site for international plant

By STEVEN K. POWELL
Universe Staff Writer

A Taiwanese computer manufacturing company chose the Salt Lake International Center Industrial Park as the site for the company's first international plant, said a Department of Economic Development spokesman.

Compeq Manufacturing Co., which produces printed circuit boards for computers, had many reasons for choosing Utah as the site for their plant, said Andy Johnson, Department of Economic Development Utah International Office trade executive.

He said that among the main reasons Compeq chose Utah were that the site is located close to the airport, providing easy access for customers, and the quality of the work force in Utah meets the high standards Compeq is looking for.

Johnson said ompeq was impressed by two other Utah locations, The East Bay Business Park and The Springville Industrial Park, but the Salt Lake International Center had better transportation access.

He said Compeq's original investment will be about $15 million, but should reach $25 million within five years time. He said they will hire 262 workers, but should hire up to 700 eventually.

Russell G. Behrmann, Division of Business and Economic Development public information officer, said Compeq wanted a facility close to the airport because they will be doing business with customers from all across the country.

Johnson said the company had origiinally chosen a site in Ohio for their new plant, but after Utah's Department of Economic Development office in Taiwan convinced Compeq to look at Utah, the company decided to build here.

Behrmann said that H. W. Chen, Compeq chief executive officer and chairman of the board, was skeptical that Utah was the place for Compeq's new plant. Chen said, "When my people told me they wanted to look at Utah, I told them not even a bird would lay an egg there. Now I am telling the world this is where we will build our nest."

"What will be, will be. We've been diagnosed. The legal procedure is in process, and we've got to look to the future."

Dixon also said he would be sending a letter about the situation to the NCAA no later than Monday.

An arraignment is scheduled for May 4 for the four former coaches and Carter, assistant U.S. Attorney John Barton said.

A trial would be held within 70 days of the arraignment.

The grand jury investigation of the school is complete, but the statewide probe is continuing and more indictments are expected, U.S. Attorney Vinton D. Lide said.

Meanwhile, former South Carolina offensive coordinator Frank Sadler said Thursday he would be surprised and disappointed if the four former coaches were found guilty.

"I think maybe some of the coaches might have said, 'Hey, we're playing a tough schedule; we're playing some real physical football teams. You guys have got to get as big and strong as you can,'" Sadler said.

"But it's hard for me to believe that our coaches would encourage any kid to take something that they know is bad for his health and bad for his life," Sadler said. "That's just hard for me to even imagine."

DEPOSIT REFUNDS

When you check out, remember it is your legal obligation to tell your landlord where to mail your deposit refund. It's a good idea to give him a stamped, self-addressed envelope. And let him know that you expect to receive the deposit within 30 days, as prescribed by Utah law. If there is disagreement about the condition of the apartment or damages, try to reach an agreement before checking out.

If you don't receive your deposit within 30 days of check-out (or a statement explaining why it is being held) or if deductions have been made with which you do not agree, contact the BYU Off-Campus Housing Office to learn what further steps you may take.
